The award recognizes individuals in the North Texas community who have shown the highest level of dedication to the Children's mission to make life better for children.

"I understand that great not-for-profit organizations are made so by great volunteer leaders. We have been fortunate to have Sandra and Gifford leading the way for Children's, and their influence and contributions will continue to shape the vision and progress of Children's for years to come," said David W. Biegler, Children's chairman of the board.

This year's two honorees are highly involved in philanthropy in the greater Dallas community and both are cochairs of the $150 million wePromise Campaign for Children's Dallas.

"Sandra and Gifford have always recognized that at a not-for-profit hospital like Children's, philanthropy is essential," said Christopher J. Durovich, Children's president and chief executive officer. "From my first days at Children's, their focus and enthusiasm have been constant reminders that working here isn't just a job. It's a chance to make a difference worldwide, by leading an organization that cares for our future thinkers, dreamers and leaders — our children."

Special guest Alexandra Wilson, Children's patient, joined Durovich on stage to present the honorees with their awards. Entertainment for the evening was provided by a variety of performers and artists, notably music performed by the Suzuki Institute of Dallas orchestra.
